

Details, Details, Details

Now 22 years old, Young D.C. is the independent voice of young people (ages 13 to 19) in the metropolitan area. Although the volunteer staff produces nine 16-page issues of the newspaper each year, not all staff members work on each and every issue.

YDC meetings are held every second and fourth Saturday of the month at 1 p.m. in the newsroom. Please note that the January and March SAT test dates and all ACT test dates fall on YDC meeting dates. Be sure to check with editors about possible rescheduling.

Visiting the newsroom is encouraged. It has good resources and is an intern site for teens from high schools in D.C., Maryland and Virginia.

Young D.C. can be found in coffeehouses, restaurants, bookstores, libraries, public and private high schools, self-service businesses, print and broadcast media, non-profit organizations and social service agencies.

Attach clips if you have them. Also attach a statement of 200 to 300 words. It should:

Illustrate your writing ability,

Tell why you are interested in working with teens from diverse backgrounds to produce an independent newspaper and provide additional information you feel is appropriate. Columnists tend to be experienced YDC reporters. However, success as a blogger, website or 'zine reporter counts. Columns start with the interests and talents of teens. Computer-related Cyberian Tyger and food review column Tastebuddy appear in the Lifestyle section. Omnivorous Reader, a book review column, appears in the Entertainment section.

Editorials are printed on the Viewpoints page. A writer of a Viewpoints submission must demonstrate the ability to produce a news story on the same topic as the opinion piece.

Please attach a copy of your work. Also attach a statement of 100 to 150 words. It should tell why you are interested in working with teens from diverse backgrounds to produce an independent newspaper and provide additional information you feel is appropriate.
